Digital technologies relying on data are increasingly driving change in financial markets by producing new business models, products and ways for firms to engage with customers.
(2) Customers of financial institutions, both consumers and firms, should have effective control over their financial data and the opportunity to benefit from open, fair, and safe data-driven innovation in the financial sector. Those customers should be empowered to decide how and by whom their financial data is used and should have the option to grant firms access to their data for the purposes of obtaining financial and information services should they wish. Those customers should be empowered to decide how and by whom their financial data is used and should have the option to grant firms access to their data for the purposes of obtaining financial and information services should they wish.
(3) The Union has a stated policy interest in enabling access of customers of financial institutions to their financial data. The Commission confirmed in its communication on a digital finance strategy and Communication on a capital markets union adopted in 2021 an intention to put in place a framework for financial data access to reap the benefits for customers of data sharing in the financial sector. Such benefits include the development and provision of data-driven financial products and financial services, made possible by the sharing of customer data. (4) Within financial services, and as a result of the revised Directive (EU) 2015/2366 of the European Parliament and of the Council ³ , the sharing of payments account data in the Union based on customer permission has begun to transform the way consumers and businesses use banking services. In order to build upon the measures in that Directive, a regulatory framework should be established for the sharing of customer data across the financial sector beyond payment account data. This should also be a building block for fully integrating the financial sector into the Commission’s strategy for data ⁴ which promotes data sharing across sectors. In order to build upon the measures in that Directive, a regulatory framework should be established for the sharing of customer data across the financial sector beyond payment account data. This should also be a building block for fully integrating the financial sector into the Commission’s strategy for data ⁶ which promotes data sharing across sectors.

(5) Ensuring customer control and trust is imperative to build a well-functioning and effective data sharing framework in the financial sector. Ensuring effective customers’ control over data sharing contributes to innovation as well as customer confidence and trust in data sharing. As a result, effective control helps overcome customer reluctance to share their data. Under the current Union framework, the data portability right of a data subject in accordance with the Regulation (EU) 2016/679 of the European Parliament and of the Council⁷ is limited to personal data and can be relied upon only where it is technically feasible to port the data. Customer data and technical interfaces in the financial sector beyond payment accounts are not standardised, rendering data sharing more costly. Further, the financial institutions are only legally obliged to make the payment data of their customers available.	(5) Ensuring customer control and trust is imperative to build a well-functioning and effective data sharing framework in the financial sector. As a result, effective control helps overcome customer reluctance to share their data. Customer data and technical interfaces in the financial sector beyond payment accounts are not standardised, rendering data sharing more costly. Further, the financial institutions are only legally obliged to make the payment data of their customers available.
(6) The Union’s financial data economy therefore remains fragmented, characterised by uneven data sharing, barriers, and high stakeholder reluctance to engage in data sharing beyond payments accounts. Customers accordingly do not benefit from individualised, data-driven products and services that may fit their specific needs. The absence of personalised financial products limits the possibility to innovate, by offering more choice and financial products and services for interested consumers who could otherwise benefit from data-driven tools that can support them to make informed choices, compare offerings in a user-friendly manner, and switch to more advantageous products that match their preferences based on their data. The existing barriers to business data sharing are preventing firms, in particular SMEs, to benefit from better, convenient and automated financial services.	(6) The Union’s financial data economy therefore remains fragmented, characterised by uneven data sharing, barriers, and high stakeholder reluctance to engage in data sharing beyond payments accounts. (8) A dedicated and harmonised framework for access to financial data is therefore necessary at Union level to respond to the needs of the digital economy and to remove barriers to a well-functioning internal market for data. Specific rules are required to address these barriers to promote better access to customer data and hence make it possible for consumers and firms to realise the gains stemming from better financial products and services. Data-driven finance would facilitate industry transition from the traditional supply of standardised products to tailored solutions that are better suited to the customers’ specific needs, including improved customer facing interfaces that enhance competition, improve user experience and ensure financial services that are focused on the customer as the end user.	(8) A dedicated and harmonised framework for access to financial data is therefore necessary at Union level to respond to the needs of the digital economy and to remove barriers to a well-functioning internal market for data. (18) Practices employed by data users to combine new and traditional customer data sources in the scope of this Regulation must be proportionate to ensure that they do not lead to financial exclusion risks for consumers. Practices that lead to a more sophisticated or comprehensive analysis of certain vulnerable segments of consumers, such as persons with a low income, may increase the risk of unfair conditions or differential pricing practices like the charging of differential premiums. The potential for exclusion is increased in the provision of products and services that are priced according to the profile of a consumer, notably in credit scoring and the assessment of creditworthiness of natural persons as well for products and services related to the risk assessment and pricing of natural persons in the case of life and health insurance. (26) A financial data sharing scheme should consist of a collective contractual agreement between data holders and data users with the objective of promoting efficiency and technical innovation in financial data sharing to the benefit of customers. While several schemes may arise for a given product or service in a given geographical market, it is expected for the sake of efficiency that the number of those schemes will be limited. The ESAs should adopt guidelines to provide a criterion based on which members on which the members of the financial data sharing scheme and the national competent authorities can assess whether data holders and data users represent a significant proportion of the market. This should take into account the number of customers served for a given product or service in a given geographic market and data holders of a given scheme should aim to together represent at least 25% of the customers served for the given product or service in the given geographical market. The number of customers served must also be a key metric to determine the three most significant data holders of a scheme. In line with Union rules on competition, a financial data sharing scheme should only impose on its members restrictions which are necessary to achieve its objectives and which are proportionate to those objectives. It should not afford its members the possibility of preventing, restricting or distorting competition in respect of a substantial part of the relevant market.	Some MSs raised concerns in relation to the calculation of the 25% threshold in respect to a given geographic scope. It is indeed a very relevant question, especially in the case of cross border schemes. PRES believes that guidelines should be developed to orient the members of the schemes and the NCAs on how to calculate and monitor this requirement. The 25% requirement would stay to provide some orientation for the guidelines. The requirement for guidelines is added in Article 10.

	[(34a NEW) The establishment of a genuine, efficient, and functioning framework for financial data sharing in the EU requires the provision of specific rules and obligations for access to the EU market. It would undermine the market for financial data sharing and would undermine the level playing field if financial information service providers established in third countries were not subject to the same level of requirements for providing financial information services in the territory of the EU as those applicable to financial information service providers established in the EU. The customer data under the scope of this Regulation concerns detailed financial information on customer, and data directly related to the protection of investors, depositors, or policyholders. Accessing to the customer data under the scope requires a robust prudential framework to ensure the high quality data sharing which helps to build customer confidence in data sharing and contributes to the integrity of the financial system of the EU. In order to ensure effective supervision, authorisation may only be granted for financial information service providers if they are established in the EU. The Financial Services Annex (paragraph 2, point a)) to the GATS agreement sets out that a Member shall not be prevented from taking measures for prudential reasons, including for the protection of investors, depositors, policy holders, or persons to whom a fiduciary duty is owed by a financial service supplier, or to ensure the integrity and stability of the financial system. In addition, Article XIV (General Exceptions, point (c) (ii)) of the GATS provides for exemptions relating to the protection of the privacy of individuals with respect to the processing and dissemination of personal data and the protection of the confidentiality of individual records and accounts.
